RADICAL BUT EFFECTIVE.

Last spring a western judge caused somewhat of a flurry by advocating, in a public address, the use of the knife in preventing the habitually intoxicated and criminal classes from perpetrating their species.

The bold suggestion caused considerable comment, favorable and otherwise. In this connection it may be noted that the Pennsylvania legislature recently passed a bill which incorporates this provision as respects idiotic persons in public institutions.

The bill provides that if at the end of a year of treatment the case is found to be incurable the operation is to be performed on the patient. The bill does not specify the method but declares that it shall be such as shall have been decided to be the "safest and most effective."

Surely if the state of Pennsylvania deems it for the protection of society that such method should be employed in the case of idiotic wards of the state, what shall be said of the habitual drunkard and the brutally debauched criminal whose blood is tainted and vitiated? And especially of these beasts of men who endanger the lives and chastity of women? If the state shall prevent the multiplication of idiots, why not of drunkards and criminals?

Doubtless such a law would cause a great outcry from the ultrahumanitarian. But this is true.

Society will not forever suffer its remediable in season. It will not allow itself to be balked perpetually in its efforts to improve itself by the persistence and perpetuity of the vicious.

HAVE A CIGAR.

Some time since a northern judge held that when a "nagging" wife drives a man to distraction it is his privilege to go out and get drunk if he thinks that thereby he can gain solace and peace. Declaring thus for the rights of the husband, this judge says:

"In a good many of these cases I find that it is the wife who is to blame. The husband comes home peaceably inclined and then the wife begins to nag. The result is that he goes and gets drunk and I don't blame him."

There now, if when you go home tonight your wife should happen to nag you, go and make a brute of yourself. And when you get up in the morning with a dark brown tinge in your mouth console yourself that a circuit judge has endorsed your foolishness. Lord of creation that you are, allow a nervous woman who has been shut up at her task all day to nag you into getting beastly drunk. It is your glorious privilege in which a court sustains you.

But the purpose of this writing is not so much to condemn you for getting drunk. That is your personal business. The purpose is to suggest a substitute for the drink.

Why not take a cigar instead? Do you remember Bulwer Lytton's eulogy of tobacco?

"Woman in this state, the weed in that, Jupiter, hang out thy balance and weigh them both; and if thou give preference to the woman, all I can say is the next time Juno ruffles thee—O Jupiter, try the weed."

Try the weed also, O man. The next time Juno ruffles thee—try the weed.

Gen. Robert Bullock is dead. He was, politically speaking, the grand old man of Florida, in that his public record antedated all others now in official life. And he left a good record, both as a citizen, a soldier, and a civil official. The story of his useful private life and honorable public achievements will live as long as the state survives.

Brethren of the Florida press has it ever occurred to you that the Jennings conglomeration had a hand in the failure of the legislature to amend the existing infamous libel law? The fact is well-known that they, with the ex-governor in the lead, were the busiest lobbyists ever seen hereabouts—in the corridors of the capitol, in committee rooms, on the streets, in the hotels—and that they battled in whenever disclosures of the methods or performances of the Jennings administration were imminent, and often without any incentive. And they would have had a strong motive in "swatting" the newspapers, wouldn't they?—Tallahassee Democrat.

Dr. Porter, head of the Florida Health Board, is proceeding on the theory that the mosquito is due the spread of yellow fever, and he has ordered 150 lbs. of insect powder with which to exterminate the mosquitoes of Tampa. Happy Tampa. Its single case of Yellow Jack has been the means of securing state aid in the destruction of its leading summer pest. While the doctor is chasing the mosquitoes we trust he will not abandon that older and more generally accepted theory that yellow fever is primarily a filth disease, and that he will order a general clean up, not only of Tampa, but every city and town in the state.

The West Palm Beach Sun states that "notwithstanding Bob Davis' declaration that he has forever retired from politics, he is the logical candidate for Governor to succeed Hon. N. B. Broward. He would not have to re-enter politics, for he is the favorite of the State, regardless of politics."

THE AWAKENING OF THE MAYOR.

By F. C. Miller. [ABRIDGED]

The mayor of the little town of X was indeed an ideal officer for a high-license town, being an honest German who liked his beer and considered the saloon a necessary adjunct to any progressive little city.

He had a son who possessed a very inquisitive disposition; and he was not satisfied with a superficial knowledge of a subject. He took an especial interest in the sciences, among them physiology. His home training had been entirely at variance from what he learned by his researches. Being somewhat worried, he decided to consult his father, the mayor. That dignity was very proud of this, his only child, and when the young man explained to him what he had learned from the study of the effects of alcohol upon the human system when taken in moderation, the old gentleman was somewhat taken aback, but said: "Well, well, dot is all right for you, my son, you needn't drink any beer if you don't want to; but don't let them people make a crank out of you. What would our town be without saloons? Think of our business interests, my boy. Do license money—$4,800 each year paid into our city treasury. Why, if it was not for our saloons, what would our town be? Why, it would be dead. Go on and study your books, my boy; but remember the saloons are necessary for any good business town."

This phase of the question naturally appealed to James, being by heredity of a business turn of mind; and from that time he considered the saloons a necessary evil, though his better nature often rebelled at the thought.

Shortly after this conversation James heard a minister, a man of God who had the courage of his convictions, preach a strong temperance sermon, taking for his text Isaiah 28:15: "We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement."

"Since our Heavenly Father has said, 'A drunkard shall not inherit the Kingdom of God,' are we not truly at agreement with hell, when we license this institution which sends to drunkards' graves 90,000 precious souls each year?"

James was much disturbed, and he phoned to the minister for an interview that afternoon which was granted. Reserving nothing, he told of his early home training, his studies, his conversation with his father, and how he had come to the conclusion that it does seem terrible that the licensing of the saloon is such a great wrong as you proved this morning."

The minister smiled kindly as he looked at the anxious young face, and replied: "The trouble is, my dear boy, you have concluded that we must have the license money, when such is really not the case."

"The economic phase of the liquor question is indeed a great one, and when our people fully realize what they are losing by this traffic, then, and not until then, can we hope for the day of better things. You told me your town had six saloons, each paying a license of $800, making $4,800 in all. It is estimated that the average saloon earns $7,000 a year. We will concede that, being in a small place, they fall below the average and extra $200 apiece, the six making $49,000 a year, leaving them a profit of $25,000. You see for each dollar they give the city they take between four and five dollars themselves, the greater part coming from the poor laboring man, thereby robbing him of his family necessities of life."

"That is entirely a new way of looking at it," exclaimed James, "but, by Joe, I like it."

The minister laughed at this burst of boyish enthusiasm and continued: "What is true of your little town, is true of other license towns, and on a much larger scale, is equally true of our nation. The national drink bill for alcoholic beverages during the past year was $1,172,500,000. Now if you wish you may imagine out what that would be per capita."

Axiously to know more about the subject, James took the proffered pencil and paper and promptly set to work.

"We have in the United States a population of 80,000,000," said the minister.

"After a little figuring James exclaimed: 'Fourteen dollars and sixty cents; is it possible?'"

"Now you may find what the saloons pay for this privilege," continued the minister. "The latest government report of the revenue and customs, international, state and local, places the amount paid at $141,000,000."

"I find it is only $1.70 for each one," said James.

"Yes, that is the amount the saloon pays in return for the $4.80 it takes from each citizen. These figures would not seem so terrible were it not for the fact that in return for this money our people get nothing that will benefit them either in this world or the world to come."

"I know," continued the minister, these figures startle you, but they simply repeat the cost of the liquor itself. Let us consider for a short time the indirect cost of the liquor traffic upon our people."

"In the state penitentiaries in New York 85 per cent of the convicts admitted that directly or indirectly intoxicating liquors were the cause of their crime."

but $100 a year, it would amount to $500,000,000. And these persons must be maintained, and the people are taxed to meet these demands."

"To these expenses we might add the loss of labor our nation suffers because of the number of men who are employed in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. If rightly employed, it is estimated these men would add over $3,000,000,000 yearly to the national wealth."

The amount expended each year by our people for private charities is large, though I have no estimate of it. Our old people's homes, our orphanages, our home missionary work, of which 50 per cent we may safely attribute to the effects of the liquor traffic."

"You see another $1,000,000,000 would not cover the indirect cost of the saloons upon our country. (To be continued.)"

Gen. Bullock's Life Record.

Gen. Robert Bullock, whose death occurred at Ocala last week, was a notable figure in the history of Florida.

Gen. Bullock was born in North Carolina December 8, 1828, moving to Florida in 1844. In his early life he was a school teacher. He began his public career in Florida in 1849, when he was elected clerk of the Circuit Court of Marion county, which position he held for six years. He then engaged in business for a year. In 1856 Gov. Brown commissioned him to organize an independent company of mounted volunteers as a protection against Indian incursions, he filling the position of its captain for eighteen months, when it was considered safe to disband the company. He then returned to Ocala and read law, being admitted to practice in 1861. He practiced his profession for a year, and was then commissioned by Gov. Milton to raise a company for the Civil War, which became a part of the Seventh Florida Regiment.

Gen. Bullock fought in the Kentucky campaign with Gen. Kirby Smith, being soon promoted to a colonelcy. He was in the battle of Chickamauga and at Missionary Ridge, at which latter place he was captured. He was a prisoner of Gen. Sherman from November 1, 1863, until March, 1864. He was in many other battles and reached the rank of brigadier general. He was wounded at Murfreesboro in December, 1864, and discharged for further service. When he recovered he resumed the practice of his profession in Ocala, being later appointed judge of the Circuit Court, but was ousted by the reconstruction of 1868. He was the Democratic nominee for Lieutenant Governor in 1872, and a Tilden elector in the campaign of 1876. In 1880 he was elected clerk of the Circuit Court for Marion county. He also represented the Second Congressional District in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, retiring from public life in 1892. Later, however, he was again called to the Circuit Court for Marion county.

Gen. Bullock was a man of many talents, a soldier, a statesman, a lawyer, and a gentleman. He was a man of high character and a man of high ability. He was a man of high honor and a man of high courage. He was a man of high integrity and a man of high principle. He was a man of high wisdom and a man of high strength. He was a man of high courage and a man of high honor. He was a man of high integrity and a man of high principle. He was a man of high wisdom and a man of high strength.

Plans For Florida's University.

This looks like business, notwithstanding some efforts to prove the National educational bill unconstitutional.

Greenville Temple Snelling of New York, member of the firm of Snelling & Potter, architects and engineers, has arrived in the city. Mr. Snelling has been appointed by the Board of Control and the State Board of Education to make plans and specifications for the proposed University of Florida buildings, to be located here, and will proceed at once with the work, having same ready for submitting to the joint board at the meeting to be held August 14. It is the purpose of Mr. Snelling to submit for the consideration and approval of the board plans for the most up-to-date and complete buildings in the south, and the same will no doubt be accepted.—Gainesville Sun.

Three of Family to Hang.

Rev. J. G. Rawlings a retired Methodist preacher of Lowndes county, Ga., was on Monday sentenced to death for the murder of the children of Rev. W. L. Carter, another Methodist preacher. At the same time Milton and Jesse Rawlings, sons of Rev. J. G. Rawlings, were sentenced to death on the same day, and still another son, Leonard, was sentenced to imprisonment for life, all for complicity in these murders.

Alf. Moore, a negro, also found guilty of complicity in the same murders, was sentenced to death on Tuesday.

When the Rev. J. G. Rawlings stood up to receive sentence and was asked what he had to say why sentence should not be passed, he said: "My conscience stands erect. You can no more pluck it than you can the brightness of the sun. The sentence can do no more than kill. Pass it."

"Think of it. This old man had been a preacher. Other ministers had besought him to consent to a patching up of his differences with half way. He refused. Even to these peace-makers, Rawlings threatened to kill Carter on sight. He educated his own sons to hate and instigated them to murder. He went further and hired negroes to assist. They didn't murder Carter but they shot his two children evening."

Could hate go further even in this man who for years posed as a meek and lowly follower of the Nazarene? There can be no mistaking of this man Rawlings' guilt; it was a guilt proved by many reliable witnesses and denied by none save himself. And yet in the very face of death this canting hypocrite had the sublime nerve to stand before the court and prate of an "erect conscience."

"Which you can no more pluck than you can the brightness of the sun."

The Lottery Marriage

(Original.)

My father and mother died within a few months of each other, and I, a girl of twenty, went to live with an aunt. I had not been educated to fill any position, and, my father having left me nothing, the outlook was distressing. I made up my mind to go to work at something in which no preparation was needed, but my aunt was unwilling that I should be at such a disadvantage and persuaded me, at least temporarily, to wait for some better opportunity.

One day she came to me with a letter, which she read to me. It was from Ethan Andrews, a civil engineer, who had gone to Brazil to take a position on a railroad that was then being built and had determined to make the country his home. He was evidently a practical (I called it brutal) sort of a fellow, without a spark of romance in him, for he asked my aunt to select a wife for him and send her to him just as he would commission her to buy a horse. She proposed that I should be the article purchased.

The case, on Ethan Andrews' part, I have since learned was not so bad as it appeared. My aunt had written him about me with a view to making a match and had sent him my picture, but she said nothing to me about this, leaving me to decide, as it were, in cold blood. The letter she had shown me was his reply. They had their own reasons for this course.

At first I rebelled, but at last, in a fit of desperation, consented, taking the leap as a husky doe will jump from a cliff. I asked no questions as to the traits of the man into whose arms I was about to cast myself, nor to see his likeness. I was taken to the steamer as a lamb led to the slaughter.

The steamer touched at Havana, and this was my first appearance on deck. Under other circumstances I would have been interested in this scene so recently connected with the Spanish-American war, but now I was too heartless to be interested in anything. When later we steamed out of the harbor, a gentleman began to tramp back and forth apparently for exercise near where I was sitting. Presently he noticed my forlorn appearance and gave me an involuntary look of sympathy. Then he went below, I inferred, to get rid of so lugubrious a sight as myself, but he soon reappeared with a bundle of magazines and deferentially offered them to me. This was the beginning of an acquaintance that in a few days ripened into friendship. Though he delicately refrained from asking me the cause of my gloom, I longed to tell some one and confided it to him.

"Poor child," he said, a world of sympathy in his voice, his manner, and especially in his kindly brown eyes. "Do you wonder," I asked, "that I am the quintessence of misery?"

"I do not. At the same time I can understand the motives of the man who has sent for you. Doubtless he missed the companionship of his own countrymen, especially of his country women, and, remembering that 'love is blind' and 'marriage is a lottery,' concluded to rely upon your aunt's selection, especially since he could not go and select for himself. No, I am not prepared to admit that the man you are to wed has the unrefined instincts you infer."

"And what do you think of my action in the matter?"

He made no reply for some time. He was pondering.

"I have evidently found it easier," I said, "to excuse him than me." "My hesitation is rather that you require a woman instead of a man to judge for you. The adage put yourself in his place is in this case impracticable. No man can put himself in a woman's place."

"You can at least judge whether I have acted wisely or not."

"Under duress you have made a decision involving a risk, but who shall say whether your circumstances justified the risk or whether it is a greater one than if you had selected your life partner after a study of him during a courtship in which you were blinded by love and in which each participant studies to conceal every defect?"

If the man who had sent for me had put his proposition in such comforting words I'm sure I should have fallen into his arms. Possibly I gained comfort from the modest manner in which my companion analyzed my case, and more especially his soothing, kindly tone. At any rate I was relieved and did not relapse into my former state till we entered Rio harbor. But at parting with my friend, although he strove to cheer me, as soon as he was gone I collapsed.

The same evening at a hotel in Rio a card came up to me, and, brushing away tears, I nervously tried to meet the monster who was to be my partner for life. When, instead, the companion of my voyage came into the room my heart beat with a wild hope that Providence had sent him with a reprieve. He stood looking at me with an amused look for a moment, then asked:

"Well, have you seen your brutal partner? I can't presume to call him your lover."

"No, his card has just come up, and I supposed you were he. I presume he will be up in a moment."

"My poor child," he said, "I am Ethan Andrews."

"Yes, I went to Havana to meet you. I feared so businesslike a courtship might repel you and preferred that you should have an opportunity to judge of me before completing your bargain. If you prefer to return, your ticket is ready for you."

It is needless to say that I chose to remain.

Home Coming Week

The above may not be understood by everybody, but with the large number of North Carolinians who have migrated to Florida, and particularly the large number who have come from Robeson county, understand what it means. Florida, at this time having a very large number of turpentine operators who originally located at the above point will be glad to learn that the Atlantic Coast Line will put into effect on August 18th, 19th and 20th, a rate from Jacksonville to Red Springs, N. C., and return of $13.90. This is one fare plus 25c and this rate applies from all points on the Atlantic Coast Line in all states, not excepting Florida. Red Springs is an exciting town and a recognized educational center, noted also for the wonderful life and giving mineral spring located within its border. These tickets will be limited good to return to September 1st and can be extended to September 30th. For further information, schedules, sleeping car reservation, etc., write or call on Frank C. Boylston, District Passenger Agent, 138 West Bay St. Jacksonville, Fla.

The statement is made that the G. S. & F. R. Y. is behind the project to build a spur from Newberg to Melbourne, a distance of three miles, thus giving the latter town an outlet. The spur will follow the old line of the Green Cove Springs & Western, whose track was torn up and sold for scrap iron some 10 years ago.

Just at this season of the year all those who have not had an opportunity to go away for a short vacation are now thinking of the best points to go to and best and cheapest way to get there. As usual, the Atlantic Coast Line will operate their annual mountain and seashore excursion on August 18th. With their superior schedules and their train service in general and exceptionally low rates, this midsummer excursion will enable most anyone to visit the resorts in North Georgia, Tennessee and North Carolina. The rates to Norfolk are exceptionally low. There will be special train service over the Atlantic Coast Line in both directions between Jacksonville and Norfolk; through sleeping car service. In addition to these low rates, which will be supplied on application to the Atlantic Coast Line office, at 138 West Bay Street, Jacksonville, there are excursion rates beyond Washington making close connection with trains from Florida over the Atlantic Coast Line for all points in interior New York; in addition to this of the steamer lines leaving Norfolk, Baltimore and Washington have named very low rates.
